Overview

Amy Brigham Boulris is a shareholder who joined Gunster in 2012, after over two decades of successful practice with the widely respected property rights boutique, Brigham Moore. Amy is a diverse litigator, experienced at both trial and appellate levels.

Amy continues to devote her practice to the defense of property rights in the context of eminent domain, inverse condemnation, Harris Act claims, property related civil rights claims, zoning proceedings and related land use litigation, as well as to general civil appeals. She also frequently handles land use dispute resolution proceedings on behalf of clients.

Clients and colleagues call upon Amy when faced with complex issues in the constitutional property rights and land use fields, and she has been a frequent presenter in national forums on the subject. As a member of Gunster's Appellate practice group, Amy also has a diverse civil appeals practice, representing clients in both state and federal courts.
